DETAILED ACTION

1. Applicant's election of Group II, including claims 10-18, 24-28, and 33-36 in the reply filed on 23 April 2007 is acknowledged. Because applicant did not distinctly and specifically point out the supposed errors in the restriction requirement, the election has been treated as an election without traverse (MPEP § 818.03(a)).

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

3. The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(e) the invention was described in a patent granted on an application for patent by another filed in the United States before the invention thereof by the applicant for patent, or on an international application by another who has fulfilled the requirements of paragraphs (1), (2), and (4) of section 371(c) of this title before the invention thereof by the applicant for patent.

4. Claims 10-13, 16-18, 24, 26, 33-36 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(e) as being anticipated by Kester et al. (US Patent No. 7,185,015, filed March 14, 2003), hereinafter called Kester.

Kester teaches detecting the launch of an application on a workstation (col. 4 lines 24-30) by a workstation management module, and determining access privileges of the workstation or the user. This determination is based on the application attributes, one of which is the version of the application (a hash, which identifies the application, is generated. One of the identifiers is the version of the application, as shown in col. 4 lines 42-52). The access privileges are determined based on an operating policy (col. 5 lines 25-30), and if the policy does not allow the execution of the identified application, the execution is denied (col. 5 lines 30-39). Kester teaches the limitations of claims detailed as follows:

4.1. As per claim 10, Kester is directed to a method comprising: determining a version of program code (col. 4 lines 48-53, where the version of an application (program code) is determined as a property of the application) satisfying an operating policy (col. 5 lines 25-30, where the policy corresponding to the application is also identified); and denying execution of program code on a client if a version of the program code on the client is different from the version of program code satisfying the operating policy (col. 5 lines 33-35, where the execution is denied if the policy does not allow it. Therefore, if the policy associated with the version of the launched program does not allow its execution, it won't be executed, and if the policy associated with the version allows execution, it will be executed. Therefore, the program version that is different than the version allowed to be executed, will not be executed.)

4.2. As per claim 11, Kester is directed to the method of claim 10, further comprising executing the program code on the client when the version of program code on the client corresponds to the version of program code satisfying the operating policy (see response to claim 1).

4.3. As per claim 12, Kester is directed to the method of claim 10, further comprising determining the version of program code on the client during launch of the program code (col. 4, lines 42-43).

4.4. As per claim 13, Kester is directed to the method of claim 10, further comprising receiving the operating policy at the client (col. 5 lines 4-9. Note that per Fig. 2, the workstation management module is part of the workstation).

4.5. As per claim 16, Kester is directed to the method of claim 10, further comprising notifying a user at the client if the version of program code on the client is different from the version of program code satisfying the operating policy (col. 5, lines 47-62).

4.6. As per claim 17, Kester is directed to the method of claim 10, further comprising notifying a network administrator if the version of program code on the client is different from the version of program code satisfying the operating policy (col. 15, lines 32-60).

Art Unit: 2132

4.7. As per claim 18, Kester is directed to the method of claim 10, further comprising recording in a log if the version of program code on the client is different from the version of program code satisfying the operating policy (col. 13, lines 4-21).

4.8. Limitations of claims 24 and 26 are substantially the same as claims 10-13, and 16-18 above.

4.9. Limitations of claims 33-36 is substantially the same as limitations of claims discussed above.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

5. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

6. Claims 14-15, 25, 27, and 28 rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Kester.

6.1. As per claim 14, Kester is directed to the method of claim 10, further comprising writing the version of program code on the client to a cache and then reading the cache while the program code is loading (col. 13, lines 4-21 teaches logging that an application is allowed for execution. Examiner takes the official notice that caching to speed up a decision process was well-known in the art. Therefore, Kester's teaching of logging the execution allowed application, and the official notice make caching and reading the cache while program is running to speed up decision making to execute the program obvious.

6.2. As per claim 15, Kester is directed to the method of claim 10, further comprising updating the program code on the client when the version of program code on the client is different from the version of program code satisfying the operating policy (col. 15 lines 32-60 teaches downloading and categorizing applications to workstations (note that per col. 10, lines 17-20, collection data includes application itself). Kester teaches how the administrator determines if a program can be executed on a workstation. It also teaches how applications can be updated on a workstation. Examiner takes the official notice that downloading a version of a program that can be executed on certain workstations was a well-known practice for the system administrators. Therefore, the official notice and teachings of Kester makes downloading the version that satisfies the policy (is allowed for execution) to the client obvious. Note further that col. 14, lines 27-54 teaches collecting an inventory of all applications on workstations, and determining if the programs are allowed for execution.

6.3. As per claim 25, Kester is directed to the system of claim 24, further comprising a security module authenticating the client in a network, the authenticated client receiving the operating policy (col. 18 lines 2-5 shows encryption of data such that only the authorized user can read it, therefore teaching a security module and making authentication to protect data confidentiality obvious).

6.4. As per claims 27 and 28, Kester is directed to the system of claim 24, wherein the operating policy includes at least one access control list (ACL) or ACE (ACL and ACE were well-known mechanisms to specify a policy. Examiner takes official notice that because ACL and ACE were widely used, it would have been obvious to use them to express policy).
